

The fourth estate: history of the UK's newspapers

What's 300 years old and still gets people talking?

The UK's newspaper industry.

Love them or loathe them British newspapers are the envy of the world.

Nowhere is there more variety, diversity of opinion and choice.

More than 16 million national newspapers are read every day.

Mary gives you the low down on each newspaper – its readership, bias and best scoops.

She goes behind the scenes at the Daily Mail – Fleet Street's toughest newspaper.

The inside story behind the Telegraph's MPs' expenses scandal is revealed.

She explains why newspapers still matter.

The industry is reeling from the recession and a dwindling number of readers. Mary explores what the future holds for newspapers as they fight for survival.

Her talk is full of trade secrets, surprises and stories about Fleet Street and beyond.